

PRINCESS MARY AND VISCOUNT WILL WED TUESDAY AT NOON

First Royal Wedding in Years Attracts Unusual Attention to London—Viscount's Tenants At Reception.

London, Feb. 27. — Princess Mary and Viscount Lascelles, K. G., whose nuptials will take place in Westminster Abbey tomorrow at noon, signed the pre-marriage contracts today. It is understood that the royal princess signed renunciation of her right of succession so far as known to the only Americans invited to the wedding are Ambassador and Mrs. Harvey.

The last of the wedding receptions took place this afternoon at Buckingham Palace. Among the guests were the tenants of Viscount Lascelles, great estates at Harewood. Several of the Lascelles tenants, including the village butcher, were invited to the marriage ceremony. A general holiday has been ordered at Harewood, where there is high rejoicing.

According to ancient custom, Queen Mary will awaken her daughter tomorrow, kissing her and wishing her a long life of married happiness. This beautiful ceremony has long been handed down through the lines of the royal family. Crowds are descending upon Yondon and the streets are in gala attire. The city is taking on the aspect of a huge fair. There is a general air of rejoicing and the royal marriage is the chief topic of conversation. Best wishes for happiness are pouring in upon the princess from all ranks and classes of people.

YOUNG FATHER DROWNS BABY SON IN BATH TUB

Young Father Tells Police That He Drowned His Own Son Because His Wife Would Not Live With Him.

New York, Feb. 26. —Walter Liddle, 19 years old, clerk, confessed tonight, the police said, that he drowned his seven-months-old son in the bathtub of his Bronx home this afternoon, because his young wife refused to return to him.

Pressed for an explanation, he is said to have declared that he decided to "end it all by killing the baby and having the state electrocute me." He was arrested on a homicide charge.

Mrs. Liddle left her husband a month ago after quarrels due to his inability to obtain permanent work, the police said. She took the baby to the home of her parents, where Liddle called on her this afternoon, and after unsuccessfully importuning her to have dinner with him, asked for permission to take the child out. He told the police he hastened to his home with the infant, where, after fondling him for twenty minutes, he decided to drown him.

Edward J. Glennon, District Attorney, stated the young man declared he had weighted a pillow with iron and sunk it in the partly filled bathtub, intending to place the baby upon it. It disclosed the water, however, and he decided to remove it. Then, he told Mr. Glennon, he kissed the child several times, dropped him into the water and ran to tell his wife of his action.

LIVE STOCK VALUES IN KENTUCKY SHOW A BIG SHRINKAGE

Value of Livestock in Kentucky Decreases 44 Per Cent. From Last Year, Commissioner's Report Shows.

The value of livestock on Kentucky farms January 1, 1922, was approximately $92,738,000 compared to $127,396,000 January 1, 1921, and $165,703,000, January 1, 1920, according to the annual estimates issued by the U. S. Bureau of Markets and Crop Estimates in co-operation with State Commissioner of Agriculture W. C. Hanna. This is a decrease of $72,965,000, or more than 44 per cent., in the value of Kentucky farmers' livestock since January 1, 1920, and nearly 24 per cent. below the 1914 values before the war. The decrease in total value is due chiefly to shrinkage in prices, though there has been an accompanying decrease in numbers. Since January 1, 1921, dairy cows show a decrease of only 1 per cent., other cattle 7 per cent., sheep 3 per cent., and hogs 5 per cent., in total numbers. Horses and mules show no change in numbers. This estimate gives the numbers of livestock on farms in Kentucky January 1, 1922, as follows: horses 374,000; mules 293,000; milk cows, 520,000; other cattle 511,000; sheep 631,000; and swine 1,214,000.

The average farm value of milk cows in Kentucky January 1, 1922, was $100.00 per head compared to $73 January 1, 1920; other cattle $20 compared to $38.80 January 1, 1920; and horses $68 compared to $105; mules $82 compared to $230; sheep $5 compared to $11.20; and swine $7.50 compared to $13 January 1, 1920.

DR. PORTER ACCEPTS CALL TO LOUISVILLE.

Public acceptance of a call to the pastorate of the Third Avenue Baptist church of Louisville tendered last November to the Rev. Dr. J. W. Porter of Lexington, was given Sunday morning by the minister prior to delivering his "first official sermon" in the church. Dr. Porter declared he "felt he had been called here" and would assume his new duties immediately.

A resignation which had been given to the Lexington church in December was tendered again Sunday, according to a dispatch. The former resignation had been voted down by the entire congregation of the First Baptist church, Lexington, it was said.

Dr. Porter has been pastor of the latter church fourteen years, and during that time its membership has increased to more than 1,500 persons, with a yearly budget for missionary purposes of $40,000.

MODERN MYTHOLOGY IS DEPICTED IN MOVIE FILM

Added Reel at Washington Theater This Week Without an Increase in Price of Admission—Kilo Watt Is Coming.

The great god Thor goes on the warpath in "Back of the Button," a one-reel Rothacker picture which will be shown at the Washington Theater on Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday of this week.

This film, which modernizes mythology, depicts Thor as the mightiest warrior of his time. Thunderbolts were his weapons. Yet one day without warning he turned into a prominent pacifist.

The people of the earth brought about this great change. They did not know they were doing it. Thor simply locked down upon us one day and was overwhelmed with the desire to divert his powers of destruction to the task of lightening man's burdens.

This added reel in which Mr. Kilo Watt takes the leading part is added at the Washington on Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday of this week. Although the film is but one reel, it is filled with interesting facts as well as much fun for both young and old. Be certain to see "Back of the Button" this week at the Washington.

MYSTERIOUS MURDER IS CLEARED BY DYING SOLDIER

Whitesburg Soldier on Death Bed Confesses That He Slew Girl and Put Her Body in Ohio River.

Whitesburg, Ky., Feb. 27. — In the death bed confession of John Coyer, former soldier, at Beaver Creek, north of here, the mysterious death of Miss Lula Viars three years ago has been cleared up. Coyer stated just before he died that he was the murderer of Miss Viars.

They were sweethearts and at one time were engaged to be married. Miss Viars disappeared and her parents offered a large reward for any information as to her whereabouts. A year later her body was found in the Ohio River just below Ashland.

Just before Coyer died he confided to friends in a whisper that he murdered Miss Viars because she betrayed him and loved another. He stated that he struck her in the head with a hammer and killed her.

To hide the crime he placed the body into a dry goods box and shipped it to Ashland. At Ashland he carried the body to the river bank and hurled it into the river. The body was later found floating on the surface of the Ohio River.

THE DUTY OF A CONGRESSMAN

The Chicago Journal of Commerce has some excellent comment on "A Congressman's Duty." It calls attention to the fact that this is a congressional election year and that congress is actually aware of it. "But how," it asks, "can a representative be too careful in representing the desires of his constituency? Is he not in office for that very purpose? We criticize public men for continually seeking to perpetuate themselves in office; but is the criticism just, when the only way they can do so is faithfully to follow the wishes of the majority in their several districts?" The Journal continues:

But it is the duty of a congressman to follow the opinion of his district regardless of what it may be? When the submission of prohibition amendment was before congress numerous instances occurred in which congressmen voted against their convictions when certain their views were contrary to those of the majority of their constituents. When the war came on public sentiment in a number of districts was against the government's policies. In those cases, what should have been the decision of representatives? In numerous instances at the present time, with elections only nine months in the future, many congressmen find their districts, controlled by selfish interests, in favor of legislation clearly inimical to the general welfare. In such a dilemma, which horn thereof should the congressman take?

This brings us to the consideration of the vital point, which is this: Is a congressman bound to represent prevailing opinion in his district whether it be right or wrong? Is he in congress merely to record by his votes the impulses of his constituents, so after born of error or prejudice, selfishness or ignorance? Or has he been chosen as a trustworthy representative of the best thought and the enlightened and unselfish patriotism of his district, whether it be in the majority or a minority? We incline wholly to the latter view.

Congress is a national body. In its hands rest the general welfare of the country at large, both in peace and in war. It is our belief that it is the nation to which he should be loyal at all times, rather than to the shifting currents of opinion in his own district, when they turn to the advocacy of unwholesome and hurtful policies. By no other course of conduct, we take it, can a congressman avoid hypocrisy. If his district is led to a wrong opinion he should remain right, regardless of his personal political fortunes.

A hard doctrine, that, but sound. Above every other consideration in national political life should be the general welfare of the Republic. It is not the destiny of any particular district with which a congressman is entrusted, but the future of the Union as a whole. We know this is heresy to the common habits of congressmen who put their transient personal popularity in their individual districts above all other considerations, but the history of our greatest and ablest statesmen demonstrates its essential righteousness. The words of Polonius to Laertes in "Hamlet" apply to all men, in congress as elsewhere, with all the power of eternal right:

This above all: to thine ownself be true,

And it must follow, as the night the day,

Thou canst not then be false to any man.

In congressman generally followed this principle of conduct the politics of our country would have an unprecedented revival of virtue and sincerity.

Says the Springfield, Mass., Republican:

Few American statesmen have had anything approaching Mr. Cannon's career in the national house. Fewer have stayed there until they were 86 years old. Inasmuch as the next congress will not begin its sessions until 1923, Mr. Cannon would be nearly 90 when that congress had expired. He prefers not to seek re-election, which could be had for the asking.

The famous Danville (Ill.) district began sending Mr. Cannon to congress in 1873. Fifteen years ago Mr. Cannon was heard to say, while in a reminiscent mood, that Senator Cullom and himself were the only Illinois men left of that old guard, who knew Abraham Lincoln; and Lincoln has been dead nearly fifty-seven years. Today Mr. Cannon is the sole survivor of the Illinois group that was in Lincoln's personal following. He became state's attorney for the Twenty-seventh judicial district in 1861. Between 1868 and 1873 he was in private life, and then began the remarkable congressional career which has not been continuous yet has been virtually Mr. Cannon's sole occupation for half a century.

Mr. Cannon's fifty years in and out of Washington—mostly in—form a phenomenal experience in American politics. It seems trite to say that the house will not seem the same without him, yet that faintly expresses the situation. For the eight years of his iron speaker-ship the house was Mr. Cannon and Mr. Cannon was the house. His dramatic fall had elements of dignity that preserved for him the respect of the country.

Few people can now remember the name of his immediate predecessor in the speaker's chair, yet no one who reads the country's political history will ever fail to recall Mr. Cannon as a man who not only reigned but ruled.

INSURANCE FOR THE UNEMPLOYED

The suggestion of unemployment insurance has to recommend it little more than an appeal to emotion. Men need work rather than insurance, work at a living wage—honest reward for honest industry. Human nature is very weak at best and the moment the worker finds a prop to lean upon he is likely soon to lean so heavily the support will break. Platform orators and those who cash in on flag waving and spurious patriotic mouthings may paint lurid pictures of the suffering of "the great unwashed" in the heated tenements of the cities; they may find occasion once more to drag into the sunlight the thousand and done economic fallacies that have kept the world at war for years, but the plain truth is that nature has destined man shall live only by his labor and anything calculated to dull the ambition cannot be regarded with favor, particularly in this land of plenty. It will be a happy day when "charity" is abolished entirely in the scheme of things and "justice" takes its place. The idea of handing "allowances" to idle workers is repugnant to the American mind. It would tend to sap men of their initiative, to eliminate their self-reliance, and worse it would put a damper on their incentive to think. The problem of steady work is not an impossible problem, but it is one that must be solved by the ingenuity of man. The comforts of our homes with all their labor saving devices come to us as the result of suffering from the elements and the natural desire to make life more comfortable. Out of the spur of suffering comes a better world. Without the spur the world gets flabby. Unemployment insurance is the last word in un-Americanism.

WASHINGTON WAS REAL MAN HISTORY IS NOW DISCLOSING.

People of America Have Thought of
Country's Father as a Dicty
Rather Than an Ordinarary Man.

In the room of the Masonic lodge at Alexandria, Va., is a pasted portrait of George Washington, painted from life in 1794 for the members of this lodge, of which Washington was a member, by William Williams, of Philadelphia. Washington was then 82 years old, and was in his second term as president. This portrait is perhaps the most faithful likeness of him in existence. The artist, according to instructions, painted him exactly as he was, omitting no blemish. The marks left by smallpox in his youth are plainly visible. No wrinkle is overlooked or subdued. The eyes are faded. The corners of the mouth droop. It is not a handsome face, and bears little resemblance to the idealized portrait of Stuart. Moreover, it shows that at 62 Washington was an old man physically. He looks in the picture to be at least ten years older than that.

Yet there is a strength and dignity in this severely honest portrait that makes it more impressive than the handsomer ones with which we are familiar. One finds it hard to leave it. There are numerous interesting relics of Washington in this lodge room, but one comes back to this portrait again and again. This, one feels, is Washington, the man his intimate contemporaries knew. And seeing him there as he was, one feels that he loses nothing by this frank revelation. On the contrary, that scarred old face inspires more reverence than all the pictures that glossed his blemishes and made him something other than he was.

And it is no less true of his reputation, that reality is more impressive than fiction. Historical research and criticism have removed much of the glamorous of legend tradition that surrounded Washington. They have ruthlessly exposed his weaknesses, such as they could find. The net result of all this is a truer conception of the man, a better understanding of the vast difficulties with which he contended, a judgment of posterity that is based upon truth and yet adds to rather than subtracts from our admiration for his personality and his services. We know Washington today—or we can know if we will but read—better than did most of his contemporaries who were too close to the circumstances of the time to get a fair perspective. And we know him much better than in the succeeding years which tended to deify him rather than to appraise him justly. We owe much to historical iconoclasm when it has been truthful and sincere, for it has helped to make Washington more real, more substantial, and because, having done this without diminishing his greatness, it has established his place in history and in national reverence more securely and permanently.

The real Washington was essentially a man. And he was not a man of transcendent ability in any direction. His education was not extensive. He had little legal learning. At the beginning of the revolution he had had small military experience. He had had almost no training for statesmanship. He was exceedingly confident in speech. He disliked public life. He had no ambition for the plaudits of men. He much preferred the simplicity of his rural home and the association of his ordinary friends. If it had not been for the circumstances of the time he would no doubt have lived and died at Mount Vernon unknown to fame. But the time required a man, and Washington proved that he was pre-eminently the man for the time. It was the extraordinary high average of all the desirable and needed qualities of manhood that made him great above his fellows and peculiarly fitted him for the task. In him "common sense was lifted to the level of genius." He burned with no visionary fire. His ideals were lofty but they were practical. He did not reach for the unattainable. The best thing that could be done was for him the thing to do, if the best, from a practical standpoint were also right. He would not compromise with his conscience. The right was the first consideration; expediency followed. And this was the natural outgrowth of his incorruptible integrity.

It was the confidence in this integrity, in the wisdom of his judgment, in his unalterable justice, that made him the pillar of strength which supported the whole edifice built up by "revolution and the constitution." "Father of his country" is no mere figure of speech. It is not too much to say that he alone made it possible, that but for him there would have been no independence and no republic. For three years of the revolution it was the single personality of Washington that held the army together and maintained the cause. It was his courage, his patience and his patriotism that persisted onward in the face of disaster and internal turmoil that discouraged all others. And after the war was over, and the splendid result achieved seemed to be lost in the quarrels between the states, in the general disorder, in the grave economic difficulties, it was largely his influence that created the new government as it was his wisdom that set it upon its way.

There has been few men in the world's history whose qualities were so admirably balanced as were Washington's. Supremely great in no one of them he was supremely great in the rare combination of all those virtues by which true greatness must be judged. "No nobler figure ever stood in the forefront of a nation's life," says Green, the English historian, in his chronicle of the war for independence, and in that sincere tribute the whole world concurs. — St. Louis Globe Democrat.

HO WEARTHQUAKES

MAKE OWN RECORDS.

If an earthquake takes place at the other side of the world, it writes its own record on the delicate instruments at Georgetown University, at Washington, D. C.

Next morning you will see in the papers that the instruments have recorded an earthquake of great violence which took place in South America. It may be days before news comes through by telegraph from the scene of the upheaval to confirm the instrument's message.

The seismograph, as the earthquake recorder is called, consists of a revolving drum and a tiny mirror. The latter is balanced so delicately that the slightest tremor of the earth's crust will set it dancing. The drum, which is turned by clockwork, is covered with a roll of sensitized photographic paper. The mirror focuses a little point of light, reflected from a brilliant lamp, on to the paper.

So long as nothing is happening the mirror remains at rest, and as the drum revolves a perfectly straight line is traced on the paper by the point of light. But as soon as a shock occurs the mirror is agitated and the line becomes a zigzag.

Plenty of Maysville evidence of their worth.

Fred Dresel, proprietor tailor shop, 1238 East Second street, Maysville, says: "I am glad of the opportunity to recommend Doan's Kidney Pills. I was troubled with inflammation of the bladder and annoyance from my kidneys. When passing the secretions they burned terribly and often bordered on a stoppage. I had severe aching pains across the small of my back which greatly interfered with my duties. I was telling a friend how my kidneys acted and he advised me to get a box of Doan's Kidney Pills at Wood & Son's Drug Store. I began taking Doan's and they gave me prompt relief. Doan's did me lots of good and I know they are an excellent remedy."

Mr. Dresel gave the above statement February 6, 1908, and on November 22, 1920, he added: "I think just as highly of Doan's Kidney Pills today as I did when I gave my former recommendation many years ago. My cure has been a lasting one."

New York Letter

by Lucy Jeannie Price

New York — The opera of "Salome" may again appear on the Metropolitan stage after fifteen years of exile. The man who most strenuously insisted on banishing this opera of the dance of the seven veils, the love affairs of doddering old King Herod and the gruesome incident of John the Baptist's head, was the late J. Pierpont Morgan. So it is rather interesting that the one who will be most responsible for bringing it back—if it comes—will be his daughter, Anne Morgan. For it was the tremendous success here of the Chicago Opera Company's production of "Salome," given by the arrangement of Miss Morgan for a French relief organization, that has aroused the Metropolitan Company to the hope of trying it again.

The poor city dwellers! Martial law and village curfews will have neither fears nor novelty for them shortly. A curfew on package carrying has gone into effect in the Borough of Bronx, our great northeast section of the city. All police officers will halt and interrogate conveyors of packages at night as one measure of stopping the crime wave. The theory is that whenever a burglary is committed the burglar carries the loot away with him, and the police are going to catch him at it. So far, all packages intercepted have contained not loot, but liquor, but the work will continue.

—NY—
Co-operation gives increasing evidence of its big place in our development. New York saw the largest shareholders meeting in its history the other night when more than 1500 owner-members of the Hotel Commonwealth gathered in the Town Hall and called the officers of their company to account. It was the annual meeting and was characterized by a searching investigation into the business conduct for 1921 of the greatest co-operative enterprise in America. This great hotel of 1500 rooms will be opened in June 1923. After a grilling of more than three hours duration, the members of the Hotel Commonwealth passed a unanimous vote of confidence in their directors and re-elected them to office, with the addition of one Jason Rogers, publisher of The New York Globe.

—NY—
We are going through one of our periods of agitative controversy here just now, and at times it threatens to grow a bit acrimonious. It's all about the church and the stage. That is, it started that way; gradually other things are being corrauded into it, and we'll probably have the flora and fauna somewhere in the debate before it ends. Rev. John Roach Straton attacked the stage. Then William A. Brady made violent objection; and something like an informal debate took place between them. Now Russell Janney, another producer, has invited all the clergymen of the city to come and see his "Marjoraine" to prove how desirable the theater is, and various pastors have lined up against the extreme utterances of the Rev. Straton. So much for the theater. But music—Irving Berlin's beloved jazz—was being attacked even more strenuously, and something had to be done about that, he decided not to debate but to write another song about it—a jazz song, of course! "Don't Blame It All on the Music" is the title, and Irving claims that it says just as much as he could say in an hour's platform argument. Meantime, it takes our minds off the gun-men and the melting snow.

—NY—
We usually think of New York's ornaments and monuments as being pretty new—as belonging to this age in its clamorous modernity. It is something of a shock to you if you come upon it suddenly to learn

STATE'S WAIVE TO BE GIVEN PLAY AS WELL AS BOOK STUDY

As New Location of Kentucky Children's Home Arrangements Have Been Made to Give Children Supervised Play.

Louisville, Ky. — First build up the body and prepare it for the task of absorbing an education, then train the mind. This is the new method of educating the children of the Kentucky Children's Home Society, inaugurated with the removal of the society from the old Home on Baxter Avenue to the 86 acre tract at Lyndon, Ky., where already two units of cottage village have been built.

The education of the young minds and the scientific play that is expected to build up the bodies of the little waifs, are in the hands of Mrs. A. L. Harris and Mrs. B. U. Seay, educators who obtained their initial training in Louisville public school work.

The great spacious out-door play ground has been equipped with all modern play devices that develop the body and make the child happy. In wet or cold weather the children play in the basement, also equipped with all kind of play-ground devices.

It is pointed out by George L. Sehon, Superintendent of the Society, that many of the children arrive at the Home in an under-nourished condition, often so emaciated their lives are despaired of. The first task is to make their bodies healthy; and yet so often the child of less than twelve, who is brought to the Home, has had no schooling whatsoever, so it is then that schooling and play are linked hand in hand. These untutored children, illiterate and underfed are put on special fattening diets; all memories of the terrible hardships they have undergone are effaced from their minds by play and loving treatment, and between these hours of play Mrs. Harris and Mrs. Seay hold short classes; thus getting the child used to school by gradual degrees. The play periods become shorter as the school periods become longer, until the child having attained normal weight and health, gets down to the real task of learning the foundation of the edu-on that sends them from the Home equipped to combat life's battle in the industrial world.

LONG DISTANCE MARRIAGE.

An English girl has discovered that the lass who loves a sailor has more to her than a disappointment before her. She lives in London and was engaged to a sailorman. The cruiser, to which he was attached, was not scheduled to visit the English waters and he could not secure a long leave of absence. Where there's a will there's a way, so his fiancée secured a marriage license in London to marry him in Mardid, a port of call for him. When she reached there he had gone to Gibraltar. She followed but discovered her license was not good in that city. His next port of call was Constantinople, so she hurried ahead of him and secured the proper license to marry in the Turkish capital. Their place of residence has not been decided upon.

Old gentleman: "Why are you fishing, my boy? Don't you know you ought to be at school?" Small Boy: "There, now! I knew I'd forgotten something."

VANDERBILT DIVORCE RUMORS.

Mrs. Raymond T. Baker, according to rumors from Paris, is about to seek a divorce from her husband, who was formerly director of the United States mint. Mrs. Baker is the former Mrs. Alfred Gwynne Vanderbilt. Her former husband lost his life on the Lusitania in May, 1915. In 1918 his widow married again. She recently reached Paris with the children by her former husband and is taking up residence there.

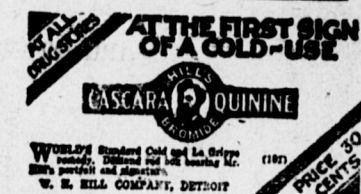

MORE MEN MARRIED.

Marriage among American men has increased about four per cent., according to recent statistics made public. While more men are marrying the same statistics show that more women are seeking divorces and the ratio of divorces to the population has increased twenty per cent. in the last decade. In the divorce cases instituted practically 75 per cent. or them were brought by women as the complainants.
